From Ch'ing-shih wen-t'i (CSWT) to Late Imperial China (LIC)

1.1 Introduction

LIC is a peer-reviewed academic journal, established in 1965 under the name CSWT (清史問題), primarily dedicated to the research of China's Qing dynasty, but to a lesser extent also containing articles about the Ming dynasty. It “presents methodologically innovative work in political and intellectual history, social, economic, cultural, and gender history, as well as historical demography, art history, religious studies, philosophy, and literature.”<sup>1</sup> CSWT was the first project of the Society for Ch'ing Studies, “founded at San Francisco, on April 2, 1965, by a group of scholars meeting together informally during the annual Association for Asian Studies (AAS) conference.”<sup>2</sup> upon initiative by Mary Wright who enlisted support of John Fairbank and others.<sup>3</sup> According to the founding editor, Jonathan Spence, the purposes of CSWT are several: “one, to present short notes or articles on Ch'ing history and society for examination and comment by the bulletin's readers [...]; two, to serve the thoroughly practical purpose of building up contact between Ch'ing scholars scattered around the world by publishing their queries on matters of substance and keeping track of all the scholarly Ch'ing work in progress, to speed research and to avoid duplication of effort.”<sup>4</sup> It started as an irregular mimeographed bulletin, and in 1969 became a printed booklet with increase of readership. The enlarged format with dragon cover was adopted in 1975. Two issues per year sent to subscribers in twenty countries.<sup>5</sup>

During the journal's more than fifty years of existence, both purposes have undergone significant transformation. Over the years, the length of individual contributions has grown visibly so that it is no longer feasible to speak of “short notes”, and all practical work of building and keeping contact between Qing<sup>6</sup>

Notes on the collection of membership fees, meeting reports of the society, or lists of scholars were a mainstay of early bulletins during the 1960s and 1970s but have disappeared altogether from the journal in its present-day incarnation.

1.2 Editors

- Volume 1, Number 1, 1965-05: Founding editor Jonathan Spence at Yale, with Stanley Spector (Washington University in St. Louis) as treasurer. Marilyn Egel, also at St. Louis, was secretary. Spence published twenty issues.
- Volume 3, Number 1, 1974-11: Editor Ramon Myers. In 1975 all publication functions were consolidated at the Hoover Institution<sup>7</sup> under Myers, with the assistance of first Katherine T. Myers and then Maude M. Mease as secretary-treasurer.
- Volume 4, Number 11, 1979: Joint editors James H. Cole, Dept. of History, Yale University, Susan Naquin, Dept. of History, University.<sup>8</sup>
- Volume 5, Number 2, 1984: Charlotte Furth and James Lee serve as new editors.<sup>9</sup>
- Volume 6, Number 1, 1985: Ch'ing-shih wen-t'i (CSWT) is rechristened as Late Imperial China (LIC). “The name indicates our desire to reach out to a wider audience, including non-Qing specialists, and to suggest a more organic periodization than a dynastic framework easily allows.”<sup>10</sup> Besides that, LIC also becomes a refereed journal. Joshua Fogel serves as Associate Editor.
- Volume 14, Number 1, 1993-06: William Rowe takes over from Charlotte Furth. In addition, Johns Hopkins University Press is now the new publisher.
- Volume 15, Number 2, 1994-12: “Effective with this issue, Joshua Fogel retires as Associate Editor of Late Imperial China, a position in which he has served for ten years. Aside from his general creative input, Josh has been the journal’s resident expert on matters japanological.”<sup>11</sup>
- Volume 28, Number 1, 2007-06: Tobie Meyer-Fong and Janet Theiss take over as co-editors.<sup>12</sup>

- Volume 36, Number 1, 2015-06: The journal marks fifty years of Qing studies.

1.3 Contributions

Short articles, many just a few pages long, research notes and reference materials dominated the first years of CSWT. The reference materials did not only highlight publication efforts, they also described archival sources of most diverse origins, and lists of scholars engaging in various fields of Qing studies were published on a regular basis.

With the opening of the People's Republic China in the late 1970s, Qing research in China became accessible again and was surveyed either directly or via Japanese digests. Two series of articles on Japanese studies of Ming-Qing (ten reports covering 1978–1992) and Post-Opium War China (four reports covering 1979–1982) consist of translations of research reports originally published in Shigaku zasshi 史学雑誌. Next to translations from Japanese, there are also articles based on Korean and Chinese originals.

By the mid 1990s, the translation activities ceased, but new and original contributions by young Asian scholars increased significantly. The length of contributions also grew considerably, and papers comprising several dozen pages are now the rule rather than the exception.

A new format of intellectual exchange was introduced in 2016 under the title Conversations.<sup>15</sup>

1.4 Contributors

For half a century, more than 350 scholars have contributed approx. 450 scholarly research papers of variable length to CSWT and LIC (this figure excludes articles of purely editorial nature, such as Introits, Letters from the Editor, as well as pure reference (books) and clerical information (membership lists). The number of scholars reflects an amazing horizon of backgrounds, comprising graduate students, university teachers, librarians, public servants and independent scholars. Due to the political situation of the 1960s and 1970s, most scholars either had a U.S. or Taiwan background; only with the reform and opening of China, the number of Chinese scholars grew significantly. The ratio of 350 scholars and 450 research papers indicates that a clear majority of contributors only submits one paper (on average, we count approx. 1.25 contributions per author); the number of regular contributors (three or more papers) is small, which positively demonstrates that the journal has a strong appeal to a wide academic community; it does not have to rely on the efforts of a small circle of devoted researchers to stay alive. The composition of contributors also renders vivid testimony to the steady commitment of LIC to serving the field. In the words of Tobie Meyer-Fong, the current editor: “We do so by mentoring younger and international scholars publishing for the first time—or for the first time in English. We also do so by seeking out and publishing the best work in our field.”<sup>16</sup>

Chapter 2

Bibliography

2.1 Notes about this Bibliography

This bibliography has two major sections, the first referencing the scholarly papers published in CSWT and LIC, and the second listing all material which either contains references (grouped by books, sources, scholars and meetings) or editorial matter.

During the late 1970s and 1980s, Japanese and Chinese works could not be accessed as conveniently as 30 years later, prompting earlier editors of the journal to supply a regular translation service. The original papers might still be of interest, and thus the full references to the sources are included as well.

Since headlines like Responses, Announcements, or News Notes do little to indicate what they are about, the bibliographical references to them are in most cases accompanied by annotations, in some cases significant text is directly quoted.

Beginning with Volume 6, Number 1, 1985, Ch'ing-shih wen-t'i (CSWT) was rechristened as Late Imperial China (LIC). The change in name was accompanied by a change in publishing modalities; by 1985, Johns Hopkins University Press was in charge for publication and distribution. Johns Hopkins University Press has undertaken great efforts to make the journal available online and, in the course of this process, assigned Digital Object Identifier (DOI)s up to the back issues beginning in 1985. These DOIs are included in the bibliography, permitting users with qualified access direct online consultation of these articles. The majority of these articles is available as PDF, but for issues between Volume 17, Number 1 (1996-06) and Volume 20, Number 1 (1999-06), only HTML documents are currently available online, at least at the time of writing in April 2017.

Beginning with 1985, every issue of LIC carries a regular page Contributors, providing affiliation information about the authors of that issue. These pages do not appear in the bibliography; instead, all contributors are now gathered in one single list at the end of this bibliography. In about one in four cases, a contributor submitted more than one article; his or her affiliation may have changed, but everything is faithfully recorded in the contributor list. For all papers appearing before 1985 (that is, in CSWT), the information about contributors is gleaned from their articles. The list of contributors does not contain external information, it only reflects the affiliation situation at the current year of the issue.

"Editor's Note." Late Imperial China 37, no. 1 (2016-06): p. v. doi:10.1353/late.2016.0008.

"For over fifty years, research articles in Late Imperial China (LIC) (formerly Ch'ing-shih wen-t'i (CSWT)) have reflected the state of the field. At the half-century mark, it seems fitting to introduce a new occasional feature with a format that permits briefer and more direct reflection on the past, present, and future of late imperial Chinese history. To this end, we are pleased to introduce "Conversations," in which colleagues are invited to comment on issues of general concern to the journal's readers. These colleagues then have the opportunity to read and respond to each others contributions."

"Editors' Note." Late Imperial China 15, no. 2 (1994-12): p. iv. doi:10.1353/late.1994.0008.

Full text: "Effective with this issue, Joshua Fogel retires as Associate Editor of Late Imperial China, a position in which he has served for ten years. Aside from his general creative input, Josh has been the journal's resident expert on matters japanological. Moreover his eagle has contributed enormously to our efforts to produce this journal in correct English style. We thank him for his years of service, and wish him all the best in his future pursuits."

“With this issue Late Imperial China (LIC) once again undergoes a rebirth—a new press and a new editor. Charlotte Furth who co-founded Late Imperial China (LIC) in 1984 has retired to be replaced by William Rowe. Charlotte made many important contributions to Late Imperial China (LIC). In addition to her keen editorial skills, her major contribution was her scholarly vision which propelled us into such fields as gender and cultural studies. Her successor William Rowe brings with him new insights and perspectives. He has already arranged for a new press. Readers can anticipate additional improvements during the coming years.

The Johns Hopkins University Press is now responsible for all subscriptions and non-editorial correspondence as well as for publication and distribution. [...]”.

“With the June 2007 issue, Late Imperial China inaugurates its forty-second year of publication, its twenty-second year under its current title, and its first issue on our watch. We are committed to the journal’s long-standing mission of publishing recent work by scholars in a range of disciplines and representing diverse perspectives on the Ming and Qing periods.”

"Having served for nearly fifteen years as editor or co-editor of this journal, I will be retiring from Late Imperial China upon publication of this issue. The editorship will now be in the capable hands of Tobie Meyer-Fong, my colleague in History at Johns Hopkins University, and Janet Theiss, of the History Department of the University of Utah."

"This issue of Late Imperial China marks the retirement of Editor James Lee, Associate Editor Mi Chu Wiens, and Editorial Assistant Barbara Calli. Over the course of the past fifteen years, James and his team (including at times Charlotte Furth and Joshua Fogel) have transformed this journal from a beloved but decidedly informal organ for a few specialists, produced and circulated out of the editors' living rooms and bearing the quaint Chinese title Ch'ing-shih wen-t'i, into the glossy artifact you have before you, rigorously (we hope) refereed and edited, and published by a major university press."
